

The leader of the transitioning leader also known as the “sponsor” has critical roles to play toward transition success. Some of them are:

Share expectations of the role

Define and communicate transition success

Communicate what you/the org wants the new leader to do/change/improve

Suggest stakeholders the leader should meet with and important events and groups

Provide suggestions on how to build relationships, navigate, and communicate with the organization

Approve transition plans/goals. Hold leader accountable to plans

Validate/approve priorities for the first six months

Provide feedback to the new leader on early performance, behavior, and relationships
